

Exports

Lauren Gardner

Metropolitan Area Exports William F. Kolarik,1997-11 Provides, for the first time, comprehensive U.S. statistics on the merchandise export sales of many of the nation's metro areas. Figures are provided here on the total goods exports of 256 U.S. metro statistical areas that were collectively responsible for about 80% of all U.S. merchandise exports or about $415 billion. 77 metro areas posted export sales of over 1 billion. Also furnishes, for the 10 largest metro area exporters, extensive detail on the product composition of manufactured exports as well as export sales to selected major markets. The Detroit area was the nation's top exporting metropolis in 1994.

Development Assistance Gone Wrong Donald B. Keesing,Andrew Singer,1990 Policies impending and neglecting the development of commercial services are a significant cause of the difficulties developing countries experience trying to expand exports. It is misguided to entrust public sector trade organizations with primary responsibility for providing exporters with support services that are better provided by private commercial enterprises.

Exports, Competitiveness, and Synergy in Appalachian Industry Clusters Stuart A. Rosenfeld,1998-12 This report analyzes 7 industry sectors pre-selected by the Appalachian Regional Comm. on the basis of their importance to the region's economy and export potential. The 7 clusters include: miscellaneous plastics parts in Northwest PA and OH, electronic components in NY, household furniture in Al and MS, knitting mills in NC and VA, medical devices in Southwest PA, industrial machinery in NC and SC, and environmental technologies in Eastern TN. The targets of the analysis are small and mid-sized manufacturing enterprises which have been slow to modernize and hesitant to export, and which comprise a potential source of growth. Tables and figures.

Agricultural Exports, 1982

Our World Trade ..., Value and Volume of Principal Exports and Imports Between United States and Chief Foreign Markets Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America. Foreign Commerce Department, 1932

Exporting to Industrial Countries International Finance Corporation. Economics Department, 1990 The decade of the 1980s provided many opportunities for developing country exporters. Above all else, the rapid growth in U.S. demand for imported goods allowed developing country exports to expand. As the 1980s drew to a close, rapid growth in Japan and Europe also began to boost their imports from developing countries. However, it is believed that circumstances will be different in the 1990s: 1) demand growth in the U.S. is slowing; 2) real interest rates are expected to remain high and perhaps rise; and 3) growth of demand has been slowing down in the major developing countries. What does the future hold then? Growth in Japan is expected to be strong, and the European Community (EC) is likely to expand rapidly under the double stimulus of Europe 1992, German unification and reconstruction in the East. The key question concerns trade policy. The EC Commission will exercise trade powers that previously were exercised by the individual states. There is concern that the Commission is less attached to free trade than exporters might like. There is also concern that competition from Eastern Europe will increase; that the use of antidumping procedures will increase and that preferences enjoyed by neighboring countries and former colonies will erode, affecting business in these countries. In brief, competition will be tougher during the 1990s and developing country businesses must pay more attention to European and Japanese markets.
